Entrepreneur who started buying stocks at 17 believes in discipline, decisiveness, doing homework

When 17-year-old Rachael Carson graduated from high school, she had $17,000 in student loans. Today, she's a successful business owner and investor. In 2016, she became the youngest person to start a company through the Shark Tank, a popular TV show where entrepreneurs pitch their ideas to potential investors.

Carson's journey began with a simple idea: creating a platform for people to connect with each other. She founded the online marketplace GetHired, which helps people find jobs and build their careers. The company was a huge success, and Carson became a role model for young entrepreneurs.

With the money she earned, Carson invested in the stock market and saw a 50% return on her investments. She decided to start buying stocks at 17 and has since become a successful investor.

Carson's advice to young investors is to "do your homework, be disciplined, and make decisions quickly." She believes that investing is all about taking calculated risks and being patient.

With the help of her mentor, Mark Cuban, Carson learned how to navigate the world of finance and investing. She credits him with helping her develop her business acumen and become a successful entrepreneur.

As Carson looks to the future, she plans to continue investing in the stock market and expanding her business. She's also working on a new book about her experiences as a young entrepreneur and investor.

In conclusion, Carson's story is a testament to the power of hard work, discipline, and decision-making. By following her lead, young investors can achieve success in the stock market and beyond.
