“In the future, the job opportunities are going to be plenty in India”. Hee Jung Foo, a student at Singapore Management University, made this remark after visiting many prominent businesses in India.

Twelve students from Singapore Management University participated in the business study mission to India for 2 weeks in April.

“The purpose of this mission is to make the students aware of the business climate in India as well the business culture in India”, said Professor Janakiramanan, who was in charge of this mission. He further added “Because of this trip to India, it would be easy for these students in case they want to develop business relationship with Indian companies”.

During this study mission, the students visited Pune, Mumbai, Bangalore and Mysore and visited prominent organizations such as Tatas and WIPRO.

“Before embarking on the trip, the students had undergone lectures on Indian culture, history, business climate and business incentives. Because of this preparation beforehand, the students can understand about India and can prepare themselves as to what they can expect to see in India”, remarked Professor Janakiramanan.

“Though the number of workers in India is very large, there is very little organizational incentives for starting new businesses. If the Indian government improves on this, India can grow very fast”, remarked Jing Yun Leong. She has also been accepted to do an internship in India.

“In every organization we visited, they had employed people to serve as tea and refreshments and it was surprising to me”, said Mohamed Ridzwan, another student.

The students shared their experiences in groups and made a presentation at Singapore Management University last Friday.

In his speech, the Guest-of-Honour, Mr. Alok Prasad, the High Commissioner of India to Singapore said, “If India has to grow, the next generation will have to cooperate by their hardwork.”
