SMU’s business school of pride

Singapore’s Senior Minister Goh Chok Tong officially opened the Singapore Management University’s Lee Kong Chian School of Business in March. The school is named after one of the country’s most successful entrepreneurs, Dr Lee Kong Chian. Two years ago, the Lee Foundation donated $50 million ($80 million) to SMU, which was matched 3-1, making the total $200 million donation one of the largest contributions to a university in the world. Covering a total area of nearly 22,000 square metres, it is the largest of all four schools in the university.
