China stocks charge back

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings

Of course, the stories were trading in a range, and the company's shares were among the most actively traded in the world, with many Chinese companies being listed in the top-100 of shares traded every day. Even China's initial public offerings (IPOs), which were considered a risky bet on the future of China's economy, have traded as high as $2.84 after their January listing at 10 cents.

Delong, a steelmaker, reported a profit of $1.21 per share, which was considered cheap compared to the Singapore market's PSR average of $0.52. Stronger financials

Once-way investors are being wooed back by attractive earnings ratios and strong profit showings