Bursary policy at NTU, SMU

NANYANG Technological University's (NTU) bursaries are not open to foreign students.
- This year, close to 1,000 of its students received bursaries, worth $600 to $3,000.
- NTU's admissions dean and financial aid office head, Associate Professor Loh Nee Lam, said it awards bursaries only to local students as the money comes from taxpayers and alumni.
  - But he said a few donated bursaries are available to foreign students. In such cases, the donors had specified that the money should go to overseas students or students from a particular country.
- The Singapore Management University's smaller bursary – $750 a year – is open to foreign students in hardship. Of the 165 bursaries given out last year, 44, or 27 per cent, went to foreigners.
