NO FANDI AHMADS BUT THESE KIDS SURE HAD FUN

IT WAS a ball of a time for 35 children with cerebral palsy last Sunday when they played street soccer with Yio Chu Kang Primary pupils and Singapore Management University (SMU) undergraduates.

As part of their required curriculum, SMU first-year students worked with the Football Association of Singapore and the Asian Women’s Welfare Association Therapy & Educational Assistance for Children in Mainstream Education services to conduct a four-hour soccer clinic for the children.

Cerebral palsy patient Victor Wong, 15, summed up the experience: “I can never be a Fandi Ahmad but I can use what I learn in football to be stronger, mentally and physically.”
