SMU grads have highest employment rate
By: Staff Journalist, Singapore

SALARIES UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

Singapore - Students from Singapore Management University (SMU) are the most employable among the three local universities.

According to figures provided by the Education Ministry, 92.2% of students who graduated from the three local universities last year found employment within six months of graduation.

Students from SMU had the highest employment rate, with 96.8% of them finding jobs within six months, while 91% of National University of Singapore (NUS) found jobs in the same period. By contrast, only 89% of Nanyang Technological University (NTU) students managed to secure a job.

Students from SMU's Information Systems Management course had the highest wage level, with the highest mean monthly salary at S$3,450. NUS Business Administration graduates came in second with a mean monthly salary of S$3,400.

The lowest earners were from NUS's Applied Science course, with a mean monthly salary of about S$2,400.

At the other end of the scale are graduates from NUS’s Applied Science course. Their mean monthly salary is about S$2,400.