If I fall... I'LL DRAG MY FAMILY DOWN

Workers' Party new candidate gets emotional about family's concern over his safety

He said that, for the last three years, his wife would never go out, not even for lunch, because she was so concerned about his safety. He added that his children would never go out with him too, even when he was with his family at home. His children would always ask him if he had brought his mobile phone with him, even if he was just going for a short walk. He said that this had affected his family's life, but he had to live with it.

He also spoke about the challenges he faced in representing his constituency, particularly in the lead-up to the general election. He said that he had to balance his family life with his work, which was not easy. He added that he had to make sacrifices in order to be a good representative for his constituents.

He ended his speech by thanking his family for their support and understanding, and for putting up with his absences and long hours. He said that he was proud of his family and that they were the most important thing in his life.

He then took a moment to collect himself and composed himself before continuing with his speech. He ended his speech with a final thank you to his family and his constituents for their support.
